

Use of the Student Campus Card Photo for Photographic Class Lists

One of the most basic tenets of a good education is establishing relationships between students and professors. A starting point for those relationships is for professors to learn who's who in each of their classes, and to come to know students as individuals. Even on a small campus like UPEI's that can be a challenge, especially in large classes, or when professors are teaching several classes with moderate numbers of students in each.

The purpose of providing photographic class lists to professors is to help professors learn who's who in their classes, as early in the semester as is feasible. Of course, learning names isn't an end in itself, and both professors and students need to do more than that to develop effective relationships for teaching and learning. But learning names is a good start, and the photographic class lists are a big help.

As of January 1, 2006, it will be the practice of the University of Prince Edward Island to use students' Campus Card photographs for the express purpose of creating photographic class lists. If you do not consent, please go to "Campus Login" (located on the UPEI Home Page), click on the "Campus Card Privacy Option" and follow the directions. This will be valid while you are a student at UPEI or unless we hear from you via the Campus Card Privacy Option. If you have any questions regarding this practice, and to ensure that UPEI accurately honours your preference for privacy, please e-mail the University's Privacy Officer at privacy@upei.ca. Thank you.
